SETTING EVENT GOALS

Is your organization looking to implement or improve an ERM program? Do you need to make your organization more risk aware? Do you need help demonstrating your ERM program's strategic value to stakeholders? Are you seeking professional development to advance your career? Whatever you're hoping to gain, explaining how the RIMS ERM Conference will help you cross the finish line is critical to securing approval to attend. Your goals should be specific to your business needs and clearly demonstrate what benefits you will bring back to your organization.

Examples may include:

- Understanding how to align risk assessment depth and structure with business maturity, culture, and risk appetite.
- Learning how Artificial Intelligence can make your ERM systems more predictive, efficient, and intelligent.
- Advancing the maturity of an existing ERM program with tools like scenario planning.
- Learning how to reframe risk as a strategic tool to uncover hidden opportunities.

DRIVING INNOVATION

After returning from the RIMS ERM Conference, commit to preparing a report that outlines the value of your attendance.

Reports often include:

- An overview of the goals you set before the event and how they were achieved.
- Summaries of particularly interesting sessions with key takeaways that can immediately be implemented in your organization.
- Recaps of conversations with sponsors including their offerings and how their solutions will positively impact your organization.
- Session handouts you collected on-site or presentation slides.

BUILDING RELATIONSHIPS

Keep in touch with the people you meet by sharing your post-conference feedback or submitting a question to your peers via social media. RIMS members can also exchange ideas on Engage.
